

Notes on Contributors

David Loy, PhD, is a Co-founder and Vice President of Rocky Mountain Ecodharma Retreat Center. David's practice tradition is Japanese Zen tradition. He began Zen practice in Hawaii in 1971 with Yamada Koun and Robert Aitken, and continued with Koun-roshi in Japan, where he lived for almost twenty years. He was authorized to teach in 1988 and has led retreats and workshops nationally and internationally in places such as at Spirit Rock, Barre Center for Buddhist Studies, Omega Institute, Cambridge Insight Meditation Center, Terre d'Eveil in Paris, and Dharma Gate in Budapest.

David is a professor of Asian and Comparative Philosophy (now retired). In June 2014 he received an honorary PhD from his Alma Mater, Carleton College, for his writings on socially engaged Buddhism. In April 2016 David returned his honorary degree to the College, to protest the decision of the Board of Trustees not to divest from fossil fuel investments.

David is a well-known writer, whose books and articles have been translated into many languages. His most recent book is Ecodharma: Buddhist Teachings for the Ecological Crisis, and he is co-editor of A Buddhist Response to the Climate Emergency (both Wisdom Publications). His writing focuses primarily on the encounter between Buddhism and modernity: what each can learn from the other. He is especially concerned about social and ecological issues. David's writings, podcasts, and videos are available at davidloy.org.

Joel Magnuson, Ph.D. is an economist and associate scholar at Willamette University in Salem, Oregon, USA. He is the author of several books including: Mindful Economics: How the U.S. Economy Works, Why it Matters, and How It Could Be Different (Seven Stories Press, 2008), The Approaching Great Transformation: Toward a Livable Post-Carbon Economy (Seven Stories Press, 2013), From Greed to Wellbeing: A Buddhist Approach to Resolving our Economic and Financial Crises (University of Bristol Press/Policy Press, 2016), Financing the Apocalypse: Drivers for Economic and Political Instability (Palgrave Macmillan, 2019). His latest book, The Dharma and the Economy: The Inner and Outer Work of Buddhist Economics, is forthcoming by Palgrave Macmillan. He has also published numerous articles in journals and anthologies in North America, Europe, and Asia.

Rebecca S.K. Li is Associate Professor of Sociology at The College of New Jersey, United States. She received her undergraduate degree from the Chinese University of Hong Kong and her Ph.D. in Sociology at the University of California, Riverside. Her research interests include historical comparative study of territorial disintegration, economic development, and the intersection between Chan Buddhism and sociological theory. Her recent publications include “The Social Origin of Creativity: A Sociological Analysis of Master Taixu and master Sheng Yen as Buddhist Thinkers.” She is editor of Chan Comes West, a collection of essays by Chan Master Sheng Yen and his lay Dharma heirs on Dharma transmission.

Wendi L. Adamek is a Professor in the Department of Classics and Religion at the University of Calgary and holder of the Numata Chair in Buddhist Studies. Her research interests include medieval Chinese Buddhism, microphenomenology, and regenerative systems theory. Her most recent book is Practicescapes and the Buddhists of Baoshan, which centers on a seventh-century community in Henan, China (University of Hamburg Press, 2020). Previous publications include The Mystique of Transmission: On an Early Chan History and its Contexts (AAR Award for Excellence in Textual Studies, 2008) and The Teachings of Master Wuzhu: Zen and Religion of No-Religion (2011). Born in Hawai'i, she earned her degrees at Stanford University and has held research fellowships at Kyoto University (Fulbright), Peking University (NEH, Fulbright), the Stanford

Humanities Center, the Institute for Advanced Study (Princeton), and the Calgary Institute for the Humanities.